U.S. Eyes Progress In Russia

Obama seeks a fresh start with 1st summit in 7 years

MOSCOW | Presidents Obama and Dmitry Medvedev end a seven-year hiatus in U.S.-Russian summitry on Monday, with each declaring his determination to further cut nuclear arsenals and repair a badly damaged relationship.

Both sides appear to want to use progress on arms control as a pathway to possible agreement on trickier issues, including Iran and Georgia, the tiny former Soviet republic. Those difficulties and others have soured a promising linkage in the first years after the Cold War and pushed ties between Moscow and Washington to depths unseen in more than two decades.

Obama

In advance of Obama's arrival, a White House official said the presidents expect to announce progress on negotiations that could lead to a treaty to replace the START I agreement, which expires Dec. 5.

More broadly, the U.S. wants to use the summit to overhaul the U.S.-Russian relationship. "It's not, in our view, a zero-sum game, that if it's two points for Russia it's negative two for us. But there are ways that we can cooperate to advance our interests and, at the same time, do things with the Russians that are good for them as well," Obama's top assistant on Russia, Michael McFaul, said in a pre-summit briefing. Biden: U.S. Won't Stop Iran Strike

VP says Israel can set its own course in dispute with country

WASHINGTON | Vice President Joe Biden signaled that the Obama administration would not stand in the way if Israel chose to attack Iran's nuclear facilities, even as the top U.S. military officer said any attack on Iran would be destabilizing.

Biden

Biden's remarks suggested a tougher U.S. stance against Iran's nuclear ambitions. Administration officials insisted his remarks Sunday reflected the U.S. view that Israel has a right to defend itself.

Biden was asked whether Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was taking the right approach by indicating that Israel would take matters into its own hands if Iran did not show a willingness to negotiate by the end of the year.

"Look, Israel can determine for itself — it's a sovereign nation — what's in their interest and what they decide to do," Biden said. (AP)

Palin Hints at National Ambitions

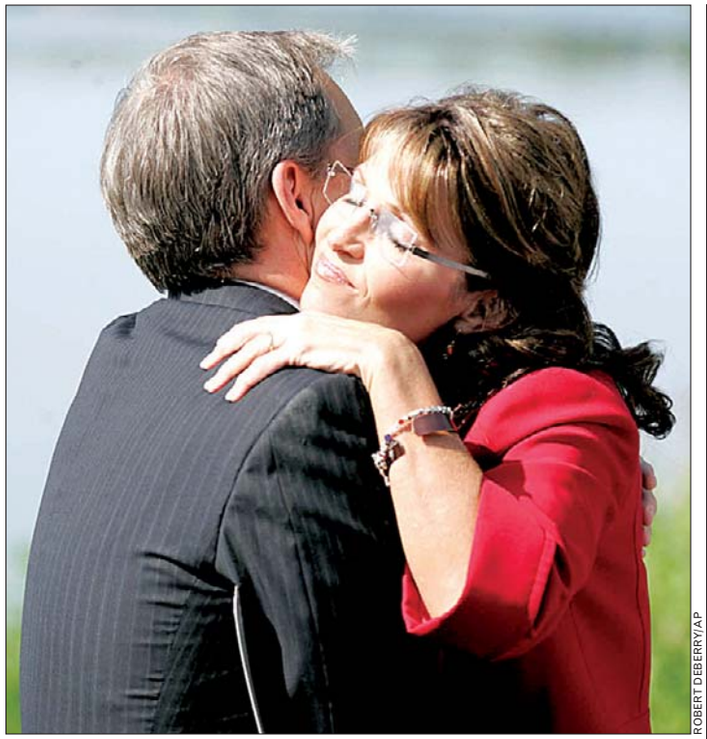

Republican's future a mystery after abrupt resignation last week

JUNEAU, ALASKA | Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin didn't wait long to give some hint of what her political life might look like after she leaves office at the end of the month.

After staying out of the public eye for most of Saturday, a day after abruptly announcing she would soon give up her job as governor, Palin indicated on a social networking site that she would take on a larger, national role, citing a "higher calling" to unite the country along conservative lines.

"I am now looking ahead and how we can advance this country together with our values of less government intervention, greater energy independence, stronger national security, and much-needed fiscal restraint," the former Republican vice presidential candidate wrote in a posting on her Facebook page. Palin's spokeswoman, Meghan Stapleton, confirmed Palin wrote the entry.

Palin shocked even her closest friends on Friday when she announced she would resign July 26, more than a year before her first term ends. But Palin has not revealed many details of bigger plans or a national agenda.

Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin hugs Lt. Gov. Sean Parnell at a press conference Friday in Wasilla, Alaska, after announcing she would resign as governor on July 26.

Palin instead cast herself as a victim and blasted the media, calling the response to her announcement "predictable" and out of touch.

Palin's low-profile and vague Internet messages left mounting questions about her plans for the future shrouded in mystery. Will she lay the groundwork for a 2012 presidential bid? Will she find a high-profile place in the private sector, maybe on the speech circuit? Will she drop out of the limelight and focus on her five children?

Her constituents, for one, wanted to know, especially in Juneau, where she has struggled to win over residents.

"I think she owes it to Alaskans to tell us why," said state Sen. Dennis Egan, a Democrat from Juneau and the son of Alaska's first governor, Bill Egan. MARK THIESSEN (AP)

INGENUITY Blinded by Hygiene Police in suburban Chicago say a taxi driver who didn't have mace handy when he was attacked by a passenger instead disarmed the man with a can of aerosol deodorant. Deputy Police Chief Jeff Swoboda said the driver grew suspicious when the passenger offered several destinations, so he surreptitiously placed the can of deodorant between his legs. Shortly afterward, the passenger put a knife to the driver's neck and demanded money. The cabbie sprayed the deodorant in the man's eyes, causing him to drop the knife. (AP)

Police: McNair's Death a Homicide

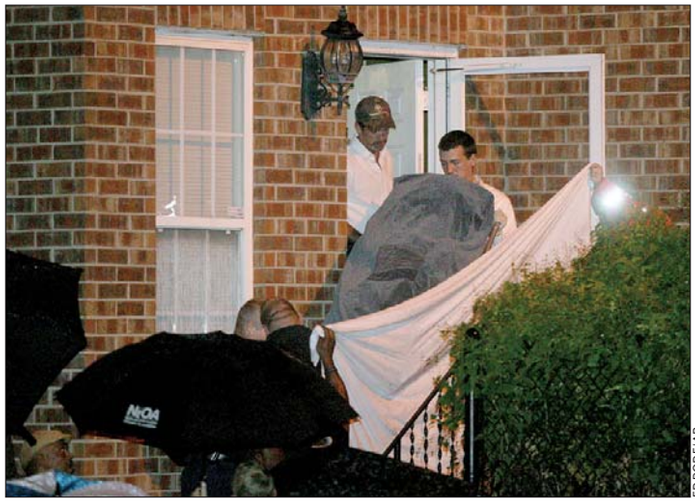

Ex-NFL star and his girlfriend found dead with gunshot wounds

NASHVILLE, TENN. | Former NFL quarterback Steve McNair's shooting death was a homicide, police said Sunday, but authorities stopped short of saying it was a murder-suicide committed by the 20-year-old girlfriend found dead by his side.

McNair, 36, was shot four times, twice in the head, by a semi-automatic pistol, Nashville police spokesman Don Aaron said. The woman, Sahel Kazemi, was killed by a single gunshot wound, and the pistol was found under her body, Aaron said.

Aaron said the two had been in a "dating relationship for the past several months."

When asked whether the deaths could have been caused by a lover's quarrel, Aaron said, "That's a very important part of the investigation as we work to ultimately classify Miss Kazemi's death."

Police hold up a sheet on Saturday as a body is taken out of the Nashville condominium where Steve McNair and his girlfriend, Sahel Kazemi, were found dead.

Police said they need to do more interviews with friends of Kazemi's and McNair's before they rule whether her death was a suicide, Aaron said.

McNair was married with four children. He and Kazemi were found dead Saturday afternoon at a Nashville condominium he shared with a friend.

Police earlier said they weren't looking for any suspects and do not believe McNair's wife was involved. Mechelle McNair was expected to collect her husband's belongings from authorities.

"She's still very upset, very distraught," agent Bus Cook said.

McNair led the famous Tennessee Titans' drive that came a yard short of forcing overtime in the 2000 Super Bowl. McNair retired last year and had recently opened a restaurant in Nashville.

Holiday Fireworks Blast Kills 4 in N.C.

Workers unloading pyrotechnics for show caught in explosion

OCRACOKE, N.C. | Four people working on an Independence Day fireworks show were killed by a blast that rocked this remote village on the Outer Banks islands.

The blast at Ocracoke came as workers were unloading fireworks Saturday from a truck at the Anchorage Marina, shaking homes and businesses across the southern end of Ocracoke Island and rattling residents and tourists.

Agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives were on the island off the North Carolina coast Sunday investigating.

Honduras' Zelaya Tries to Return

Exiled president flies toward home, defying interim leader's orders

TEGUCIGALPA, HONDURAS | Honduras' exiled president flew toward home in a Venezuelan jet in a high-stakes attempt to return to power on Sunday, even as the interim government ordered the military to turn away the plane.

Protests at the airport turned violent, despite Manuel Zelaya's appeals to remain peaceful. Security forces fired warning shots and tear gas, and some Zelaya supporters threw rocks and set a fire. At least one person was killed, according to an Associated Press photographer at the scene.

A van tore through the crowd of thousands, with someone shouting to make way for the wounded. A spokesman said the Red Cross was treating about 30 people for injuries, including a woman who had been stabbed.

"I am the commander of the armed forces, elected by the people, and I ask the armed forces to comply with the order to open the airport so that there is no problem in landing and embracing with my people," Zelaya said while en route.

Interim President Roberto Micheletti refused to withdraw his order to prevent the plane from landing and said he would not negotiate with anyone until "things return to normal." "We are the authentic representatives of the people," Micheletti said.

Zelaya won wide international support after his ouster a week ago, but the only prominent escort aboard his plane was the U.N. General Assembly president, after Latin American leaders backed out. NESTOR IKEDA AND WILL WEISSERT (AP)

G-8 Summit Irks Italy Quake Town

Residents complain meeting may interfere with reconstruction

L'AQUILA, ITALY | At this week's Group of Eight summit, the leaders will stay in a barracks instead of the usual luxury hotel. The road to the site is lined with ghostly houses ruined by the earthquake that hit the central Italian mountain town of L'Aquila three months ago.

Premier Silvio Berlusconi moved the summit from the Sardinian island of La Maddalena in a show of support for L'Aquila's stricken population. Not all of the survivors are happy about it.

Some are voicing anger at the slow pace of reconstruction and are beginning to question whether the government's decision to move the Wednesday-to-Friday summit of industrialized democracies and Russia is diverting money, time and manpower from the rebuilding of their shattered homes.

Officials insist the summit is not interfering with relief. ARIEL DAVID (AP)

Iran's Opposition Seeks Momentum

Government releases foreign reporter after his 2-week detention

TEHRAN, IRAN | Iran said Sunday it has released a British-Greek journalist detained for two weeks during its postelection crackdown as opposition forces pressing their claims of fraud called for parliament to dismiss President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad.

Athanasiadis

Iason Athanasiadis, a freelance reporter for the Washington Times, was accused Sunday of "illegal activities" during the protests that followed the June 12 election. He was thought to be the only journalist without Iranian citizenship among the hundreds of journalists, bloggers and activists detained.

The government's crackdown has quelled days of deadly street unrest, but authorities are still grappling with how to handle the fallout from the poll.

A week after the last street protest and with the main opposition leader not being seen in public, opposition figures tried Sunday to maintain momentum with a call for parliament to dismiss Ahmadinejad.

Ali Reza Beheshti — a close ally of opposition leader Mir Hossein Mousavi's and the son of a leader of the 1979 Islamic Revolution — said "people expect their representatives to represent them and not to defend authorities by any means."

"I wish the lawmakers would respect the demands of the majority of their constituents" and submit a bill disqualifying the president, Beheshti was quoted as saying on a pro-Mousavi Web site called Norooznews. JASON KEYSER AND NASSER KARIMI (AP)

Missile Launches Trouble S. Korea

SEOUL, SOUTH KOREA | The ballistic missiles that North Korea test-fired this weekend were likely capable of striking key government and military facilities in South Korea, a defense official said Sunday, amid growing concerns over Pyongyang's firepower.

North Korean state media did not mention the launches but boasted that the country's military could impose "merciless punishment" on those who provoke it.

Pyongyang launched seven missiles into waters off its east coast Saturday in a show of force that defied United Nations resolutions and drew international condemnation.

The missiles appear to have traveled about 250 miles, meaning they could have reached almost any point in South Korea, an official at the South Korean Defense Ministry said on condition of anonymity. The official said the exact details of the launches were under investigation.

The launches on July 4 appeared to be a poke at Washington as it moves to enforce U.N. and its own sanctions against the regime.

Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, warned the launches were "very destabilizing, potentially."

But Vice President Joe Biden indicated the U.S. would not be baited. On ABC, he described the flurry of rockets as "attention-seeking behavior." HYUNG-JIN KIM (AP)

Till Debt Do Us Part

If your credit card bills have gotten out of hand, now is the time to make a deal

NEW YORK | They're the punishing conditions that come with a credit card: interest rates, late fees, monthly minimums. As much as you grumble, there's little you can do.

Enter the never-ending recession and a shift in the rules.

With delinquencies and charge-offs on the rise, credit card companies are quietly negotiating terms with people in need of relief. If you're having trouble paying the bills, it could be worth picking up the phone to call your credit card company.

SPENCER PLATT/GETTY IMAGES
Many credit card companies are quietly renegotiating with those in need of relief.

The Candidates

Credit card companies are tight-lipped about who qualifies for adjustments. Among the factors a lender will consider are your income, your payment history, the size of your balance and any other debts and assets. A recent job loss or other financial emergency could be another reason for requesting leniency.

You don't necessarily have to be behind on your bills, either. Bank of America says people don't have to be late on a payment to qualify for a modification.

The Options

Among the most common ways a credit card company could ease your debt are forbearance, lower interest rates and debt management plans.

Forbearance is when a lender gives a temporary reprieve on payments. Late fees are generally waived for the period, meaning you won't get a delinquency mark on your credit report. Interest charges typically continue racking up.

Another pain-free way to get some relief is by negotiating a lower interest rate.

A more serious option is entering into a debt management plan, which entails working with a credit counseling service to repay your debt. CANDICE CHOI (AP)

PERSONAL FINANCE

INVESTING

With Bernie Madoff in prison for the rest of his life, attention is shifting to the next fraud — and to the SEC, the agency responsible for preventing it.

1 Could a Madoff-style fraud happen again? Of course it could. Enforcement is by definition a backward-looking process, with officials exposing and punishing wrongdoing only after it's been committed. But officials say fraud on Madoff's scale is unlikely because he was an uncommonly talented crook who gained the trust of investors and regulators over decades.

2 Does that mean the SEC isn't doing anything to stop the next Madoff? Regulators are doing quite a bit to prevent similar Ponzi schemes from coming to pass. The examinations division will be improving its expertise in fraud detection and in complex financial products and will look closely at firms deemed more likely to commit fraud. The SEC also will introduce a computer system to track and sift through the complaints that come in, which number between 750,000 and 1.5 million per year.

3 Now that the SEC is stepping up its game, can investors rest easy? Never. Investors who want to feel safe misunderstand the agency's role, said Laura Unger, a former SEC commissioner. As more people have investments, "there's this increasing sense that there's no longer any risk in investing," she said. But investments earn higher returns than savings accounts precisely because they carry risks — and fraud is one of those risks. "We can't end fraud, because we can't end greed and stupidity," Unger said. "But you can make an impact in reducing it and make other people sensitive and thoughtful about it." DANIEL WAGNER (AP)

Fairfax Faces an Identity Problem

As county mulls move to city status, concern of urbanization looms

Fairfax County has long been viewed as the ultimate burb, where Washington goes to walk the dog and water the lawn. But the more residents look around, the more they see what many have tried to avoid: high-rise offices, blight, crime and housing that's more likely to have a balcony than a backyard.

That changing reality came into focus last week when County Executive Anthony H. Griffin raised the possibility of officially making Fairfax a city, prompting discussion among county supervisors about whether the community of more than 1 million residents should highlight its status as an enormous jobs center that is rapidly urbanizing or embrace its classic suburban nature.

The basis for the idea is largely tactical — under state law, cities have more taxing power and greater control over roads than counties do — and it led to more than a few snickers about the thrilling nightlife in downtown Fairfax (punch line: there isn't any).

DAYNA SMITH/FTWP

Fairfax County is considering changing to city status to gain greater taxing power. Residents are concerned the jurisdiction may lose its appeal as a suburban enclave.

Regardless of whether the county changes its status — a process that requires approval from voters, the state and courts — the discussion underscored a growing tension within Virginia's largest jurisdiction. What does Fairfax want to be: a giant urban expanse like many new Sun Belt cities or more of a residential suburb, with a handful of urbanized pockets sprinkled in?

What does Fairfax want to be: a giant urban expanse, or more of a residential suburb, with a handful of urbanized pockets?

The Fairfax of today is somewhere in between. Its 400 square miles include a sea of cul-de-sacs, parks, pools and soccer fields, especially in its southern and western stretches. McLean and Great Falls remain high-end havens for some of the region's most exclusive addresses. Clifton still feels like the country.

Meanwhile, Tysons Corner is already an economic and commercial behemoth, and it's only going to get bigger as development clusters around the Metrorail extension.

For some families, Fairfax County is their corner of suburban bliss.

"It had all the ingredients that I wanted for my family," said Mary Holden, 46, a mother of four. "My kids' schools, their sports teams, their friends, the shopping — it's all here. I can go a whole week not ever leaving Burke, quite happy."

Stalking Charge For Barry

D.C. Council member Marion Barry was arrested Saturday night and charged with stalking a woman after the woman reported that Barry was "bothering her" as the two traveled in separate vehicles in Anacostia Park, police said Sunday.

Barry

At about 8:45 p.m., a woman traveling near the intersection of Good Hope Road and Anacostia Drive flagged down a U.S. Park Police officer to report that a man in a vehicle nearby was stalking her, said Sgt. David Schlosser, a Park Police spokesman. That man, Schlosser said, was Barry.

The officer interviewed the woman and Barry, and then arrested Barry and took him to the Park Police's Anacostia Station, Schlosser said. There, a detective interviewed Barry again, and police charged him with a misdemeanor count of stalking. Barry was released and ordered to appear in court, likely sometime later this week, Schlosser said. MATT ZAPOTOSKY AND MARTIN WEIL (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Tiger Woods watches his birdie putt on the 10th hole during the final round of the AT&T National at Congressional Country Club Sunday afternoon. Woods won by one stroke.

Tiger Wins What's His at AT&T

Woods holds off late run by Mahan, takes 3rd victory of the year

AT&T NATIONAL | Tiger Woods made it a hat trick of victories in tournaments hosted by PGA Tour stars, this one the most meaningful of all because it was his own.

Woods lived up to his hopes of being a "greedy host" Sunday, leaving Anthony Kim in his wake and then making a 20-foot birdie putt on the 16th hole to overtake hard-charging Hunter Mahan for a one-shot victory in his AT&T National.

He closed with a 3-under 67 at Congressional for his third victory of the year, the others coming at the Arnold Palmer Invitational at Bay Hill and Jack Nicklaus' Memorial Tournament. The challenge came from a rising star, just not the Californian anyone expected.

Mahan made six birdies on the back nine for a 62, tying the course record that Kim had set on Thursday. The final birdie on the 18th gave him a share of the lead, and Mahan had to wait more than an hour to see whether Woods could top him.

Woods twice scrambled for par to stay tied for the lead, then looked as though he squandered a good birdie chance on the par-5 16th when his chip from the rough came out heavy and stopped 20 feet from the hole. Backing off once, he rolled in it, then walked stoically to the hole, nodding his head.

He closed with routine pars to finish at 13-under 267. The 68th victory of his PGA Tour career moved him to the top of the money list and the FedEx Cup standings for the first time this year.

Whether it gives him any momentum will be determined in two weeks at Turnberry.

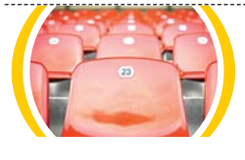

All three of Woods' victories this year have come in his final start before a major, and he finished four shots behind in both the Masters and the U.S. Open at Bethpage Black two weeks ago. The next stop is the British Open on a links course Woods has never seen.

As for the golf he played Sunday, it was the ideal final pairing at Congressional — the world's No. 1 player and tournament host tied with Kim, a confident 24-year-old who was the defending champion. Kim closed with a 71 to finish alone in third, four shots behind.

"I had a lot of fun," he said. "I know I'll be knocking on the door again. It's only a matter of time." (AP)

NFL The Best Seat in Sports A new poll on pro sports' best franchises lists Lambeau Field as the best place to watch a game. The rankings in the current issue of ESPN The Magazine come from a variety of sources, including analyzing team financial data and fan feedback for all 122 pro sports franchises in baseball, football, basketball and hockey. The Packers were the top franchise when the poll debuted in 2003 but have since slid to 13th. Still, Lambeau Field remains No. 1 for its stadium experience. (AP)

Federer Serves Up History in Final

Swiss star wins 15th major in Wimbledon epic against Roddick

TENNIS | It was a day for making history.

Roger Federer, who was reduced to tears after losing last year's Wimbledon final, exulted on the same patch of Centre Court Sunday after winning his 15th Grand Slam title — one that breaks his tie with Pete Sampras for the most career majors.

77 GAMES PLAYED on Sunday, breaking the Grand Slam final record of 71 set in 1927.

50 ACES SERVED by Federer on Sunday, a new career high.

Federer prevailed in the longest Grand Slam final in men's history, turning back a determined challenge by American Andy Roddick, 5-7, 7-6 (6), 7-6 (5), 3-6, 16-14.

With the victory — which took four hours, 18 minutes — Federer claimed his sixth Wimbledon title and reclaimed the No. 1 ranking he lost to Spain's Rafael Nadal last August.

Sampras, who won seven Wimbledon titles before retiring in 2002, was among the former champions looking on from the front row of the Royal Box, with Rod Laver and Bjorn Borg sitting just to his left. The trio boast 16 Wimbledon singles titles among them, and they rose in unison to pay tribute to Federer's sixth.

ANJA NIEDRINGHAUS/AP

Roger Federer celebrates after defeating Andy Roddick in the Wimbledon final on Sunday. He reclaimed the No. 1 ranking in the world with his 15th Grand Slam title.

ANJA NIEDRINGHAUS/AP

Andy Roddick was forced to settle for second but lost his serve only once.

Federer hailed a teary-eyed Roddick as "an unbelievable guy" and unbelievable player during his post-match remarks and urged him not to lose faith he would win Wimbledon one day. "Today, I was on the lucky side," said Federer, who finished with 107 winners and 50 aces, yet did not once manage to break Roddick's serve until the match's 77th and final game.

After congratulating Federer on a well-deserved title, Roddick turned to the Royal Box and apologized to Sampras, half in jest, for not being able to keep the Swiss star from overtaking his career mark. "I tried to hold him off," Roddick said. LIZ CLARKE (THE WASHINGTON POST)

Lance Armstrong is in 10th place after the first two Tour de France stages.

Cavendish Gets Off to a Hot Start In Tour de France

CYCLING | Britain's Mark Cavendish won the second stage of the Tour de France in searing heat Sunday, with seven-time champion Lance Armstrong finishing safely in the trailing pack.

Fabian Cancellara of Switzerland kept the overall lead after capturing the opening time trial a day earlier. He leads Alberto Contador by 18 seconds. Bradley Wiggins is third, 19 seconds back. And after finishing 80th Sunday, Armstrong is 10th overall, 40 seconds behind.

"The heat was like you were baking bread. ... It was terrible," Cancellara said on French TV. He said that with about an hour left of riding, his team manager said the temperature hit 104 degrees. "I haven't seen heat like that in years." JAMEY KEATEN (AP)

Olsen tosses a gem, Morgan adds 3 hits to claim series victory

NATIONALS | Scott Olsen watched Washington manager Manny Acta stroll to the mound in the eighth inning and figured his day was done. With the two down and the Nationals ahead 4-1, Olsen had walked two hitters to bring the potential tying run to the plate.

Imagine Olsen's surprise when he didn't get the hook.

"I told him to tell all these people to save their applause because you're getting out of it," Acta said.

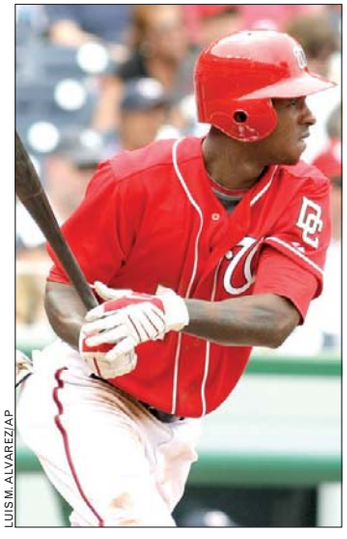

Olsen pitched into the ninth inning, newly acquired Nyjer Morgan had three hits, and the Washington Nationals beat the Atlanta Braves 5-3 on Sunday for their second-straight victory.

Olsen (2-4) allowed three runs over 8 2/3 innings, prevailing for the first time since returning June 28 from the disabled list.

"Today, he was the old Scott Olsen," Acta said. (AP)

ZIM'S AN ALL-STAR

➜ Nationals third baseman Ryan Zimmerman was named to his first All-Star Game Sunday and will back up David Wright of the New York Mets. After signing a five-year contract in the off-season, Zimmerman has proved worthy of being the franchise player. He'd hit .293 with 13 homers through Sunday. Shortstop Christian Guzman could join his teammate in St. Louis on July 14 if he is elected by fans in the All-Star Game Sprint Final Vote to fill out the roster.

Madonna pays tribute to Michael Jackson at her show in London | 26

The Face of Popularity

Hayden Panettiere reprises her role as queen bee in 'I Love You, Beth Cooper'

TYPECASTING | Hayden Panettiere is a lot like her "Heroes" character — virtually indestructible.

The 19-year-old has had to stand up to the loss of privacy that comes with fame since her sci-fi TV series became a hit from the moment it debuted three years ago. The latest rumor the teenager has been trying to quash is an alleged romance with British TV personality Steve Jones, which she denies. ("I'm single and mingling," she insists.) She also denies any suggestion she's engaged, secretly married, pregnant or buying a house.

> "There's a kind of a facade about her. It was fascinating ... to try to get to the real emotional core."

Panettiere credits her family and a tight-knit group of friends for keeping her grounded.

Though the TV show, starting its fourth season this fall, keeps her busy, Panettiere makes time for movies. She recently wrapped production on "Carmel," an independent drama starring Lauren Bacall and Alfred Molina.

With her well-scrubbed, all-American good looks, Panettiere is frequently cast as a cheerleader. She once again picks up the pompoms for the coming-of-age teen comedy "I Love You, Beth Cooper," opening Friday, in which she plays the most popular girl at her high school.

In the Chris Columbus-directed picture, head cheerleader Beth Cooper's reign as queen bee is winding to a close with graduation. Nerdy valedictorian Denis Cooverman (comedian Paul Rust) chooses the ceremony to make his long-secret feelings for the popular beauty known to the entire senior class. Mortified yet curious, Beth agrees to attend Denis' graduation party. A crazy night ensues.

Columbus was impressed with Panettiere's go-for-broke attitude — even consenting to a provocative school gym shower scene in which she shows an ample amount of skin.

"There's a kind of facade about her," he says. "She is Beth Cooper, in a sense. As a director, it was fascinating for me to try to get to the real emotional core of who she is."

Panettiere was OK with playing a cheerleader again because the story does not center on that aspect of her character. Rather, it's about young people about to embark on the next phase of their lives.

"The cheerleader is used as a symbol," reasons the young actress. "The popular girl is supposed to be the head cheerleader, right?" ANGELA DAWSON (ENTERTAINMENT NEWS WIRE)

JOE LEDERER/20TH CENTURY FOX

ANOTHER TEEN MOVIE: In "I Love You, Beth Cooper," Panettiere is at once the head cheerleader, the most popular gal in school and the love of a young nerd's life.

Franken: Imitations Welcome

The senator talks 'SNL' mockery and Armisen vs. Baldwin

POLITICIAN | Al Franken's torn over who he'd like to see turn the parody tables on him.

As a former "Saturday Night Live" cast member headed to the U.S. Senate, he could be a prime spoof target for his former show.

When asked who'd be best for the role, Franken first told The Associated Press it may be Fred Armisen, who portrays President Obama in SNL skits. He then said occasional guest Alec Baldwin might be a better fit.

NBC Entertainment declined to comment.

Franken himself parodied a U.S. senator at least once on SNL, playing a Democrat at confirmation hearings for Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

Franken expects to be on the Senate Judiciary Committee, for real, by the time hearings begin for Obama high court nominee Sonia Sotomayor. (AP)

BOX OFFICE Enjoy the Showdown Prehistoric creatures and robots were in a photo finish for the Fourth of July box-office crown Sunday, with "Transformers: Revenge of the Fallen" and "Ice Age: Dawn of the Dinosaurs" tied with $42.5 million each. Final numbers Monday will sort out which movie actually came in first. "I've seen squeakers before in my time, but never one like this," said Paul Dergarabedian, box-office analyst for Hollywood.com. Universal's crime saga "Public Enemies" debuted at a solid No. 3. (AP)

On a Serious Note

Brad Paisley gives weighty topics their due on 'American Saturday Night'

MUSIC | As much as he enjoys singing about the double lives of computer geeks ("Online") and amorous country boys ("Ticks"), Brad Paisley says there's too much going on in the world to be too lighthearted on his new album, "American Saturday Night."

"I think this country has turned on a dime in a way that none of us foresaw coming a year ago," Paisley, whose sons are 2 years old and 2 months old, recently said. "I think all of that and the birth of a son and the bold new times we're living in ... it's hard to ignore."

Paisley, who co-wrote all 14 new songs, visits those serious themes more often than before, inspired by the historic election of Democratic President Obama and the economic turmoil that's thrown people into hard times.

Brad Paisley found inspiration in the election and worldwide economic turmoil.

> "I think this country has turned on a dime in a way that none of us foresaw coming a few years ago."

The title track celebrates diversity ("It's a French kiss, Italian ice, margaritas in the moonlight, just another American Saturday night") while "Welcome to the Future" offers social commentary ("I had a friend in school, running back on a football team, they burned a cross in his front yard for asking out the homecoming queen").

The first single, "Then," his 10th-straight to hit No. 1, is a romantic letter to his wife, actress Kimberly Williams-Paisley.

On this record, there are very few of the mini-stories and characters that set the tone for so many of his other songs, Paisley said.

"This is maybe more heartfelt this time. I didn't even write any liner notes on this album; I didn't write any description of it; I didn't write any thank-yous. I feel like it's all in the record. You hear why I'm writing these songs."

The Old, Wild, Bloody West

A band of brothers takes no prisoners in the new first-person shooter 'Call of Juarez'

VIDEO GAME | The Old West may have been a slower, dustier time, but it was chock-full of danger, and the era is well portrayed in "Call of Juarez: Bound in Blood," an engaging new first-person shooter title from Ubisoft.

"Call of Juarez" ($60 for Xbox360, Sony PS3; $50 for PC) spins the tale of three brothers, Ray, Thomas and William McCall, near the end of the Civil War in 1865. Ray and Thomas are soldiers, and kid brother William is a man of the cloth.

UBISOFT

Angry, jaded Civil War soldiers shoot their way through the Old West in "Call."

After a few victories on the battlefield and with the war winding down, Ray and Thomas desert their military company and return to their home in Atlanta. They were already bad seeds, and now they're angrier.

The mission is to find a buried treasure in the bandit-infested hillside of Juarez, Mexico, and bring it back to Atlanta. William tags along, trying to tone down his brothers' bloodlust.

The bosses near the end of the chapters are gunslingers who must be outdueled, Old West style. Draw too quickly, he'll shoot you. Draw too slowly, he'll shoot you. It's fun, but if you fail, it takes a little too long to reload to try again.

Your best bet? Don't fail.

1 The Story of Stuff

Want to hear more about how we as a species are too focused on the things we buy and own? No? Well, too bad. "Objectified," a documentary about our relationship with manufactured stuff and the people who design it, is not so much an indictment of humanity's greed as a study of the people who every day decide the way our world will look and function. And that's pretty cool. F.Z.

2 Online Superstar

Bill Wasik invented the flash mob, a modern phenomenon in which a large group of people assemble and do something strange with seeming spontaneity. Now he's written a book, "And Then There's This," about the power of the Internet and the transient culture it fosters. You can hear him speak about the book and his experience with Web 2.0, marketing and pop culture tonight. F.Z.

3 Music for the Birds

Indie Americana band the Bowerbirds have toured alongside the Mountain Goats. If that didn't sell you — and we'd like to know why not — head to Bowerbirds.org to hear some of this nu-folk act's soothing, occasionally biting work. The melodies are lovely, acoustic and heartfelt, and the lyrics are often haunting, in a lost-in-the-woods-in-the-Gothic-South kind of way. They play at the Cat tonight. F.Z.

Not-So-Textbook Cases

'History Detectives' look at a killer's kin and security for the dead

EXPLORATION | Does murderous rage run in the family? Now in its seventh smart and entertaining season, "History Detectives" (9 p.m., PBS, check local listings) examines an angry and threatening letter to President Andrew Jackson, apparently written by famed actor Junius Brutus Booth, the father of John Wilkes Booth, who would go on to assassinate Abraham Lincoln.

For more than a century, Booth biographers, historians and Jackson scholars have dismissed the letter and denied any links to the elder Booth. But a little digging, handwriting analysis and a look at the famous actor's schedule and correspondence may upset conventional thinking.

Two other items worthy of academic spadework include a sawed-off shotgun thought to have been used during the St. Valentine's Day Massacre of 1929, explored in greater detail on the separate and unrelated program "St. Valentine's Day Massacre" (10 p.m., History).

There's also a curious object, thought to be a homemade land mine created in the 19th century to deter grave robbers. While researching the latter, scholars unearth late 19th-century advertisements for "graveyard torpedoes" that assure consumers that family members can rest in peace while tomb violators will be blown to pieces. Now that's something you don't often read about in the history books. KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE

Walkman Hits 30

Portable Sony device fights for relevance in market ruled by Apple

HANDHELD | When the Sony Walkman went on sale 30 years ago, it was shown off by a skateboarder to illustrate how the portable cassette-tape player delivered music on the go — a totally innovative idea back in 1979.

Today, Sony Corp. is struggling to reinvent itself and win back its reputation as a pioneer of razzle-dazzle gadgetry once exemplified in the Walkman, which turned 30 years old Wednesday. A special display at Sony's corporate archives marked the anniversary that day.

The Japanese electronics and entertainment company lost 98.9 billion yen ($1.02 billion) in the fiscal year ended March — its first annual loss in 14 years — and is expecting more red ink this year.

The manufacturer, which also makes Vaio personal computers and Cyber-shot cameras, hasn't had a decisive hit like the Walkman for years, and has taken a battering in the portable music player market to Apple Inc.'s iPod.

Sony has sold 385 million Walkman machines worldwide in 30 years as it has evolved from playing cassettes to compact disks to minidisks — a smaller version of the CD — and finally digital files. Apple has sold more than 210 million iPod machines worldwide in eight years.

There is even some speculation in the Japanese media that Sony should drop the Walkman brand — a name associated with Sony's rise from its humble beginnings in 1946 with just 20 employees to one of the first Japanese companies to successfully go global.

"The Walkman's gap with the iPod has grown so definitive, it would be extremely difficult for Sony to catch up, even if it were to start from scratch to try to boost market share," said Kazuharu Miura, analyst with Daiwa Institute of Research in Tokyo.

Miura thinks Sony can hope to be unique with its PlayStation 3 and PlayStation Portable video game consoles, but it has yet to offer outstanding electronics products that exploit such strengths.

Recording of Rushmore Planned for Educational Use

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL, S.D. | An agreement announced Friday will lead to a 3-D digital recording of Mount Rushmore National Memorial useful for public education or to replicate the carving if it's ever damaged.

One partner is CyArk, a nonprofit foundation that seeks to digitally record historic sites and monuments to create a lasting record.

The Scottish government will provide resources and technology to perform the 3-D laser documentation.

The scanning project at Mount Rushmore is expected to begin in late September and be completed in two weeks. (AP)

DISCUSSIONS

FAST FORWARD

I just switched from my crusty old Nokia phone and a Palm Zire to an iPhone 3G ($99 finally did it), and I'm thrilled with the smoothness of the operation on the iPhone. Did the price drop to $99 on the 3G — and the new 3GS — shoot the legs out from under the Palm Pre? I can't imagine I'm the only guy who was sucked in by the $99 iPhone.
There's a risk of that. On the other hand, $100 is not a huge difference in price when you look at the total cost of operation of a phone. For instance, Sprint's $70 plan includes unlimited texting; AT&T's doesn't include texting at all, and paying $5 per month for its cheapest texting add-on adds $120 to the two-year term of the plan.

So, I was playing around with a Palm Pre in the store while I was waiting for my current phone to be repaired. Everyone raves about this phone, but I thought it felt really cheap, almost like a toy, compared to other smart phones. The iPhone has a nice metallic case, and most BlackBerries have a substantial feel to them. The Pre felt like something that was going to break about the 50th time you go to open it. What's all the buzz about with this cheap-feeling device?
You need to spend some time playing with the software on it. I have never seen multitasking on a phone done better. Palm got that right in a 1.0 release; it's a lot harder to bolt that kind of feature on later, as Apple may be finding out. I can't argue that there are some cheap-feeling aspects to the Pre, like the plastic edges exposed when you slide it open and that silly little cover for its USB port. But overall, it seems pretty solid to me.

This may be too basic a question to answer, but is there an easy way to change the default search engine in Safari from Google to Yahoo or something else? There doesn't seem to be an option in Preferences, and the only solutions I've found (via Google search, of course) seem to require downloading tools that I've never heard of (and am therefore leery of). Firefox, of course, gives you a pull-down menu that lets you create as many search tools as you want.

The Mac Safari doesn't provide any simple way of changing the default search engine.

You're reading the situation correctly: The Mac version of Safari doesn't provide any simple way of changing the default search engine. Apple's done a good job of keeping up with the competition when it comes to most browser features, but it's not even trying here.

Will closed-captioning ever be available with an HDMI connection? I'm not hearing-impaired, but I often like to have the TV on with the sound off, and CC lets me follow along while I'm listening to something else. Will the two ever be compatible? I imagine there are hearing-impaired people who would like to watch HD broadcasts over HDMI and use closed-captioning.
This is news to me — HDMI is a digital connection, so I don't see why it wouldn't send over CC info that's part of a DTV bitstream.

Do I need an antenna to go with my DTV converter box? I don't want to climb the roof, but I'll be happy to get a small internal one.
Unless you're living right next door to a TV transmitter tower, yes, you will need an antenna. DTV is no different from analog TV in that respect. Plug in your address at DTV.gov to see what sort of signal you're supposed to be able to get.

Reel-Life Romance

Think it happens only in movies? Think again. When SELEN TOLU lost her wallet at a Chinatown restaurant, KAGAN KOCAOGLU decided to be a good Samaritan and return it. Then he asked Selen out for coffee. "And so our romance began," Selen says. Their first official date took place at Pizzeria Paradiso in Georgetown, where both were "too nervous to eat."

And it's not just their first date that sounds like a scene out of Hollywood. Two months after their first meeting, Kagan was about to fly overseas for an internship. "Selen was dropping me off at the airport," he says. "I held both her hands in mine, looked into her eyes and asked her to be my wife. She thought I was joking and told me to catch my flight." Yet they're about to wed July 25 in Istanbul, Turkey, on the banks of the Bosporus.

Selen, 22, is a dental student. Kagan, 31, is a lawyer. They will live in Baltimore.

- First Date: He e-mailed her asking her out to a bar. The subject line: "Suds With a Stud." "We had a really great time, but I'm still bitter he didn't pay for any of my beer!"
- How He Proposed: Over a romantic dinner at Chef Geoff's.
- Their Song: Stevie Wonder's "You Are the Sunshine of My Life."
- Stupidest Fight: "She wouldn't even let me make a pizza the way I wanted to!"
